PREFACE.

Prefaces to Dictionaries are usually introduced with a statement of the boundaries of the country, of which the language has been digested ; with an account, short or long, of the people inhabiting it ; and, with observations, more or less valuable, upon the land, the inhabitants, and the speech. These several particulars, as applying to the Murat,ha country, the Murat,ha people, and the Murat,hee language, we must assume to have been, elsewhere, largely and ingeniously treated : and, passing them accordingly, we hasten to give the public, a bill of the fare provided, for them, in the work now presented. We begin with GENERAL INTIMATIONS. 1. Of verbal nouns of the form णी (as, फाडणी, उठणी, बसणी, देणी, घेणी &c.) as the meanings of any particular one occurring can, instantly, be discovered by reference to the verb ; and, as, any particular one required by the learner upon imperious occasion, can, to serve that occasion, be called into being ; those only are inserted, of which, either the significance is something beyond that possessed in common by all of the form, or the establishment in the language is firm, or the currency, general. Though, apparently, numerous as the verbs, they are, actually, but few ; and, though, all are, as has just been said, admissible upon manifest necessity, they are, almost all, (as, for example, the five set down above,) viewed as harsh or inelegant.

2. Causal verbs, as the rule of formation is simple, (viz. the introduction, between the root and the infinitive termination णे, of व or वि ; or the changing, as preparatory to the introduction of व, of the inherent short vowel अ of the last letter of the root into ि) are omitted ; excepting, of course, such, as, in particular applications, bear an import other than, or but remotely and obscurely that of, causality. The forms of the causal verb are three. Ex. From करने arise करवणे, करविणे, करिवणे. Sometimes आ is introduced, and attached to the last letter of the root ; as in फितावणे from फितणे, विझावणे from विझणे. This is a fourth form ; and, accordingly, when it is simply such, it is omitted ; but, generally, verbs of the आवणे class are, not causal, but active, as शिलगावणे, सतावणे, मनावणे, करकचावणे, बोलावणे, or, neuter, as सरसावणे, काचावणे, शिटावणे, सुडावणे, and, as such, they are, of course, inserted and explained.* It may be observed here, that, several verbs, which may, in one view, be termed active, are formed precisely after the manner of the causal verb : ex. gr. उठवणे from उठणे, बसवणे from बसणे, निजवणे from निजणे, उडवणे from उडणे &c. To raise, seat, lay &c.—and such, indeed, being formed immediately upon the neuter verb, are truly active : yet, all such, as nothing could be said for them, which, the intelligent learner cannot

* In limitation of this declaration it must be stated, that of the active verbs of the आवणे class, formed from the imitative verbs, there are very numerous omissions ; and this, because such verbs arise and fall altogether with the occasion, upon which they are used. They are indeed not inelegant, and they are highly significant and thus useful ; and, accordingly, to the most striking of them admission has been given : but they are still viewed simply as occasional and optional formations ; and the absence of them from the Dictionary seems to be well supplied by this notice respecting them. (ex. gr. खलखलावणे, खलखलावणे, फलफलावणे, फटफटावणे, फडफडावणे, चकचकावणे &c. from खलखलणे &c.)

himself supply out of the interpretation given under the neuter form; and as, though they are, as hinted above, in one view, active, they are yet, in another view, causal, (To make to rise, sit, lie &c.) are omitted. Verbs indisputably active, viz. such as, with an active signification, arise not out of the neuter form, (ex. gr. पाठवणे, निरवणे, बडवणे, बटवणे, कालवणे, चावणे, सादवणे &c.) are inserted of course.

3. Of numerous words (whether verbs, nouns, or adjectives,) certain syllables, (whether initial, medial, or final,) and, especially, such syllables, as are terminated or followed by the letters य, र, ल, व, श, ष, स, ह, ळ, are pronounced and spelled, by some people, with, and by some people, without, the nasal sound or mark (i.e. the अनुस्वार or the अनुनासिक,) ex. gr. भोसकणे, रोवणे, शिसे, वासा, वासहं, पेचणे, रेटणे, रेकणे, चेचणे, ठेचणे, भोकणे, सापडणे, भोक, पोपेरें, काकडा, रोप, गाठ &c. and भोसकणे, रोवणे, शिसे, वांसा, वांसहं, पेचणे &c. On this head, from the arbitrariness and indeterminate character of the variation, it was not practicable, nor, for this same reason, very greatly desirable, to note all the instances in which it occurs. Many we have noticed, but, for the great remainder unnoticed, let the learner bear in mind, 1st. that in the Konkan, the form with the nasal is preferred, and in the Desh, the form without the nasal. 2dly. that the difference, as writers and speakers of both forms are much intermingled, and are constantly encountering one another, is a difference, which neither party will note in the spelling or utterance of a foreigner.

4. Imitative particles, it may be thought, have been unnecessarily inserted, or have been explained with unnecessary minuteness and closeness. But, be it remembered, that many, very many, of the most significant and expressive verbs of this language spring immediately out of them: and, of which valuable verbs therefore, as it would be absolutely impossible to convey the exact import and full power without such an explication as should show the reason or ground of that import and power, so it is incomparably more orderly, and more conducive to the exhibition of the mode, in which the meanings of the verb have arisen, to give the demanded particularity and detail under the particle, and, thither, to refer the learner for the full and clear apprehension of the verb. For satisfaction on this point, compare बुळकणे with बुळकण, सटकणे with सटकण, भळभळणे with भळभळ, भसकणे with भसकण, फडफडणे with फडफड or फडाफड, झटकणे with झटकन, तटतटणे with तटतट, खळखळणे with खळखळ, *

5. Several, certainly some thousands, imitative verbs are omitted altogether;—we mean, such imitatives, as the learner may hear: for they are absolutely without limit and without law. Such, therefore, as ढमढमणे, ढवढवणे, ढरढरणे, किणकिणणे, तटकणे &c. must, as they readily will, be made out from the imitative particles respectively their source.

6. In the interpretation of words it would have been regular, and, towards a very important

* Notwithstanding the above assumed objection and the prepared explanation for the removal of it, we desire it to be understood, that all the meanings or uses of the imitative particles we have not given, and we could not give.

purpose, (viz. the tracing of the line of connection through the senses,) subservient, to have placed the literal or primitive sense first; and, to have added, in the order of their origin or rise, the figurative and free senses. But, this literal sense is, of many words (and perhaps, in all languages,) so uncommon, that the evil, through such an arrangement, of misleading the practical enquirer, might exceed the benefit afforded to the deep-searching and recluse scholar. Accordingly, though this regular and accurate order has been, where, consistently with this reasoning, it could be, observed, the order, generally, respects extensiveness of currency or frequency of use. It may be added, that, of many Sanskrit words, the figurative use of the sense is common, whilst the literal use is uncommon even amongst the learned.

7. Compound words will be found, of course, in their alphabetical order; but, for thousands, which are constantly occurring in conversation, the learner must not consult the Dictionary, but consider the mode of composition. Ex. gr. For चारोपद्रव, मूषकोपद्रव, शलभोपद्रव, गृध्रोपद्रव, परचक्रोपद्रव, राजोपद्रव, चोरभय, राजभय, नृपभय, व्याघ्रभय, मृत्युभय, चोरसख्य, दुष्टसख्य, सर्पसख्य, &c. &c. he must turn up separately the members composing them. These are highly elegant and valuable words; but, as they are, literally, without number, and, as the mode of composition is simple, and easily apprehended, the learner may hold himself as better served by this intimation respecting them, than he could have been by the insertion of a million. Yet, for his further assistance, intimation and a few specimens have been given under several of those words, of which the use in composition is very extensive. Very useful compounds are constantly occurring with such words as अंश, अंतर, भेद, and numerous others; ex. gr. जलांश, पितांश, ज्वरांश, अर्यांश, भाषांतर, देहांतर, गृहांतर, वस्त्रांतर, वृक्षांतर, वर्षांतर, मासांतर, अर्थभेद, मतभेद, देशभेद, वैषभेद &c. &c. Of such, of course, the insertion could not be expected.

8 By the following notices the public will learn how words, amounting probably to the vast aggregate of 40,000, have been put into their possession, within the compass of a sheet:—words too, the corresponding words to which encumber almost all Dictionaries. Abstract nouns are formed, ad libitum, from the concrete terms, whether adjective or substantive, by attaching, to Sanskrit words, the affix ता, or the affix त्व; and, to Murat,hee words, the affix पणा, or the affix पण; corresponding with goodness, softness, lordship, rulership, hardihood, knighthood, &c. ALL such nouns are omitted. For योग्यता, योग्यत्व, प्रभुता, प्रभुत्व, चांगलेपणा, चांगलेपण, देवपणा, देवपण &c. see, therefore, the adjectives, or the concrete nouns. The affixes पणा & पण are attached also to verbs, and, in the infinitive mood: also to the inflected third person singular of the past tense; as चिकटणेपणा, मरणेपणा, चेतलेपणा, टाकलेपणा, These are omitted. See further under the affixes in their places in the Dictionary. Nouns of agency, as बसणारा, उठणारा, खाणारा, मारणारा, &c. &c. or बसणार, उठणार &c. corresponding with Sitter, riser, eater &c. in English, are omitted: also, nouns of agency formed by adding या to the root of the verb, as ठक्या, चुक्या, लाव्या, दप्या, लुव्या, चाव्या, उपस्था &c. are omitted; also, adjectives formed, by an obvious rule, from the noun, as खोकला, पडशा, &c. are omitted: of these formations indeed, many are licentious. The participial adjectives, बोलता, मारता, पिता, खाता &c. though they occur constantly in poetry and in popular sayings, yet, as the rule of formation is evident, are omitted. Adverbs, ending in पणीं or पणें, formed from the abstract nouns with पण, as पुरतेपणीं, चांगलेपणें, are omitted. Causal verbs, as करवणे, करविणे, करिवणी, are omitted. Attributives or adjectives formed from nouns through the affixes मान्, वान्, or मंत and वंत, are omitted. See further under the affixes in their places. Very numerous and valuable adjectives or epithets are formed with affixes and words such as वत् Like: शील Disposed to, or endowed with naturally: कारक, कारी, कर, करी That works, effects, makes, does, &c.: हीन, रहित, विरहित, शून्य, वर्जित, Deficient, wanting, void, bare, &c.: च्युत and भ्रष्ट Slipped or fallen: स्थ Situate in: सहित Accompanied by: आपन्न, आविष्ट, आतुर, आकुल, आन्वित, आवह, आक्रांत, यत्न, &c. &c. Ex. gr. वृक्षवत्, स्वप्नवत्, ब्राह्मणवत्, धर्मशील, पुण्यशील, पठनशील, सत्कर्मशील, गुणकारक, हितकारक, कफकारी, पित्तकारी, सुखकर, दुःखकर, यात्रेकरी, मारेकरी, शेतकरी, भिक्षेकरी, द्रव्यहीन, ज्ञानहीन, जलरहित, दोषरहित, पापविरहित, शक्तिशून्य, अर्थशून्य, दुग्धवर्जित, अपथ्यवर्जित, पदच्युत, अधिकारच्युत, स्थानभ्रष्ट, ससंगभ्रष्ट, आकाशस्थ, पातालस्थ, युक्तिसहित, यशसहित, दुःखापन्न, कामाविष्ट, क्षुधातुर, चिंताकुल, शोकान्वित, गुणावह, दशाक्रांत, भूतयत्न &c. All such formations are omitted; and notices are given respecting them under the several affixes and words as they occur in order. Of the past participles, as घोटोंव, पेरींव, कातींव, कोरींव, कापींव, भरडींव, only the most common have been admitted. They might be formed to serve an occasion: but, excepting the few we have admitted, they are not viewed as idiomatical. Let not the learner form any. Feminine formations from the masculine noun, by adding ईण, or, where ई is the final letter of the masculine, ण, as परटीण, भटीण, ब्राह्मणीण, शेटोण, माळोण, कुळवाडोण, कोळोण, वाणीण, जेशोण, धनीण, करोण, from परोट, भट, माळो, कुळवाडो &c. are omitted. Numerous adjectives are formed from nouns, by adding ई. Of such, the common ones we have admitted; and in place of the rest the learner must accept the rule of formation. Ex. अपस्मारी, अभेदवादी, कुमारी, क्रोधो, आग्रही, विचारो, विवेकी, रागो, द्वेषो, हर्षो, संतोषो, मोहो, गुणो, भेदो, आनंदो, प्रतापी, तर्की, अनुमानो, साधनो, संधानो, मननो, &c. &c.

9. Of the numerous names of the deities, of rivers, mountains, cities, &c. only a few are admitted: and these, only upon the ground either of their involving some points, upon which information would be valued, or of their commonness and constant occurrence.

10. The learner must bear constantly in mind that every educated speaker frames compounds by the score in his common colloquy. For these he would, in vain, turn the pages of the Dictionary. Let him imitate the people, and enlarge his vocabulary by framing new compounds with every new occasion.

11. ई and यो are terminations perhaps equally approved, though not, indeed, by people of the same quarter, of nouns constituting a very large class. We have preferred the first of these terminations; and, under the second, have repeated the noun, only in a few instances. The learner therefore should turn, for these nouns, under the termination ई.

12. Such adverbial formations, as गांवोगांव or ीं, घरोघर or ीं, देशोदेश, मुखोमुखी, as they arise according to an obvious rule, are omitted.

13. Verbal formations through reduplication are very numerous and very significant: as बांधाबांध, बांधवाबांधव, सांधासांध, धांधाधांध, मांडामांड, झाडाझाड, तोडातोड, वारावार, ठोकाठोका, उचलाउचल, ठेवाठेव, लावालाव, डकवाडकव, सारवासारव, सोडवासोडव, सांडवासांडव, गुतवागुतव, पळवापळव, उडवाउडव, बसवाबसव. Only the most common of these we have inserted; and, for the rest, the learner must remember, that he may make them to serve his occasions.

14. Almost all the Murat,hee adjectives are used also adverbially. This point has, for an obvious reason, been disregarded in the rendering of them.

15. Masculine formations in आ from feminine and neuter nouns, in order to express hugeness, bulkiness, monstrousness, grossness, &c. are common; but they are altogether free and careless, and are, of course, omitted. Ex. पोथा, पागोटा, भाकरा, पोळा, काठा, झोळा, धोंगटा, लेखणा, दैता, चोळा, साडा, मिसा. A huge tome, a whacking turban, cake, staff &c.: from पोथी, पागोटें, भाकरी, पोळी, काठी, झोळी &c.

16. Many verbs are formed from Sanskrit nouns. Of these, some take up the noun as it stands; some add ि to the last letter, or substitute ि for it; and others add it or omit it indifferently. Ex. भोगणे from भोग, भ्रमणे from भ्रम, वधणे from वध, अंगीकारणे from अंगीकार. These are not written भोगिणे, भ्रमिणे, वधिणे &c. इच्छिणे from इच्छा, not इच्छणे. अर्थणे from अर्थन, अर्पणे from अर्पण, अर्चणे from अर्चन, अर्जणे from अर्जन, वंदणे from वंदन, रक्षणे from रक्षण, प्रार्थणे from प्रार्थन, उपदेशणे from उपदेश, कथणे from कथन, त्यागणे from त्याग &c. These are written also अर्थिणे, अर्पिणे &c. And, here, two new points are to be observed: viz. that if the last letter of the noun be ण or न, the optional assumption of ि is, not before the last letter, but before the penultimate; and, that the ण or न is dropped. Of those verbs, which add or omit ि we have inserted but one form, namely, that, in which ि is omitted.

17. All verbs, of which the root ends in ह, and all trissyllabic nouns, of which ह is the initial letter of the medial syllable, are written and pronounced in three ways: thus, राहणे, रहाणे, राहाणे ॥ वाहणे, वहाणे, वाहाणे ॥ राहटो, रहाटो राहाटो ॥ राहणी, रहाणी, राहाणी ॥ वाहणी, वहाणी, वाहाणी ॥ &c. Of these three forms, the two first seem to be equally approved: the third is objectionable. We have adopted the first form: but, in the place of the other forms, have given a direction to the seeker. Also, dissyllabic nouns and adjectives, of which the initial letter of the second syllable is ह, are written and pronounced in two ways: thus, रहाट, राहाट ॥ रहा, राहा ॥ रहाड, राहाड ॥ सहाण, साहाण ॥ लहान, लाहान ॥ &c. &c. Of these we have preferred the former.

18. From the Sanskrit root many forms of a word appear in Murat,hee. Thus, from भाव To speak, arise भाषण, भाषणीय, भाष्य, भाषित्य, भाषित; from भक्ष To eat, arise भक्षण, भक्षणीय, भक्ष्य, भक्षित्य, भक्षित, भक्षक; from रक्ष, रक्षण, रक्षणीय, रक्ष्य, रक्षित्य, रक्षित, रक्षक; from गम, गमन, गमनीय, गम्य, गंत्य, गत, गमक, गमी; from व्यध, वेध, वेधन, वेधनीय, वेध्य, वेधित्य, वेधित, वेधक &c. These forms have not been regularly, (i.e. with particular and several consideration of the 2000 roots, in order to obtain all that ever occur,) inserted in the Dictionary. They are, for the most part, common and useful; and thus, perhaps, or, perhaps, upon the principle, on which Spake, spoke, spoken, drave, driven, droven, and ten thousand such, are inserted in the English Dictionary of Dr. Johnson, they all might have been inserted: but as, against this increase of matter, the learned would have raised an outcry, so, under the absence of it, let the unlearned receive this intimation as still more valuable.

19. The learner must be prepared to hear amongst free speakers, and even to meet with in poetry, many verbs formed from the noun, for which, he would, in vain, consult the Dictionary. The populace and the poets hold themselves licensed.

20. Of the phrases the literal sense is not given. In these therefore the learner is furnished with a field for the exercise and confirmation of the knowledge he is progressively acquiring.

21. As the order of the alphabet is not one, we here subjoin the letters according to that order, which we have observed. अ आ इ ई उ ऊ ऋ ए ऐ ओ औ क ख ग घ (ङ, of which nasal this is the place in the Sanskrit alphabet, is represented, in Murat,hee, by the nasal point placed over the letter preceding it. It has, therefore, no separate place; and, as, through its being represented by a dot over the line, it occupies no place in it, it affects not, as to its order, the word in which it occurs. Ex. gr. कक and कंक, चच and चंच, टग and टंग, तघ and तंघ, appear in the same spot in the Dictionary, the nasal being altogether disregarded.) च छ ज झ (ज. Apply, to this nasal, the notice just given.) ट ठ ड ढ (ण. See the notice under the nasal of the first class.) त थ द ध न (when this nasal occurs initially; but, when otherwise, it follows the rule stated above.) प फ ब भ म (Apply to म the remark made concerning न) य र ल व श ष स ह ळ क्ष ज्ञ. The wisurgu (:) is, like the nasal, totally disregarded.

22. It has been necessary to write Murat,hee words occasionally in the Roman character. It was necessary to do this according to a system; and, that of Dr. Gilchrist being incomparably the best adapted, is the system followed.

23. Innumerable words are formed by the prefixing of the inseparable prepositions (अ, अति, अप, अव, अनु, अभि, उप, परि, प्रति, निर् &c. &c.) and they are all useful. All such we have not inserted; nor, would the insertion of them all, had this insertion been practicable, have been valuable proportionately to the evil it would obviously have involved. For any one, which may be unsuccessfully sought, let the enquirer turn to the simple word divested of its preposition.

24. As correctness and exactness of rendering has been studied more than elegance or neatness, some inelegant English formations will appear in the interpretation of words altogether regular, and pure in Murat,hee. (ex. gr. non-intervalness, possessingness, doable, &c.) In further observance of this principle, we have endeavored to render imitative and emphatic words, by words; in like manner, imitative and emphatic: also, cant words by cant words; for a cant word in Murat,hee, if rendered by a word of the ordinary and regular phraseology, might, again and again, and with all ludicrousness, be misused by the learner.

25. Of the meanings, those only are exemplified, of which, examples were needed, either towards the full development, or to the prevention, through exhibiting a correct application, of disallowal or dispute by a native. And these examples are not englished, both, that the Dictionary might not be inconveniently enlarged, and that the student might have matter for study.

26. Participles from the Sanskrit, being viewed merely as adjectives, are marked a. Ex. घृष्ट, भ्रष्ट, पतित, कलित, अनुभूत, अनुभूयमान, &c.

27. It was intended to give a list of those letters which are, most frequently, interchangeable: and to add the intimation that a word, unsuccessfully sought under the one of those letters, was to be sought again under the other of them. But so extensive is this interchangeableness, and such vexation would the omission of some thousand words have occasioned, that, we have inserted the words under both the forms of writing; and, for guidance on the interchangeableness, we simply say that क and ख, ग and घ, ट and ठ, ड and ढ, त and थ, न and ण, द and ध, न and ण, प and फ, र and ल, ल and ळ, श and स, interchange constantly. Of अ and आ, ए and ऐ, ओ and औ, the interchangeableness will be noted under the division ORTHOGRAPHY.

28. It may sometimes be thought, that, of the explanation much is superfluous, or that, of many simple and well-known English words the definition is unnecessarily given:—as, after the verb To grind (under पिसेने) is added “to reduce to powder in a mill.” Of this addition the design is; not to explain, but to restrict the English verb; for, without it, the verb पिसेने might reasonably be understood to mean, “to wear away upon a grinding stone, in order to sharpen or to lessen in bulk.” Ex uno disce omnia.

29. The attributives or adjectives formed through the affixes मान् and वान् (ex. gr. बुद्धिमान् शक्तिमान्, द्रव्यवान्, पुत्रवान्) are sometimes viewed learnedly, and are declined according to the requirements of the Sanskrit grammar, (viz. मान् मती, मत् वान् वती, वत् m. f. n.) and, sometimes, are viewed altogether as Prakrit words, and are applied, without inflection, to nouns of the three genders.

30 One point in which the forcibleness or expressiveness of the Murat,hee language consists, is the abundance of formations through reduplication, and through combination of words of one general significance. The formations through reduplication, as भाकरोभिकरी, दगडगिगड, धोंडा

गिंडा, वाईटसाईट, लहानसहान &c. are, of course, omitted : but, of those of the second class, as वेठविगार, शाकभाजी, वेणीफणी, काजळकुंकू, लाकूडफांटा, घासकाडी, धोत्रपात्र, वस्त्रपात्र, मीठभाकर, मोलमजुरी, हेलपाटी, केर कचरा, भांगटिळा, टिळाटोपी, टिळेपट्टे, पानपत्रावळ, पाटपाणी, कुणबीमाळी, महारपोर, रांडपोर, रांडमुंड, खर्चवेच, शेत भात, पोरवाळ, वाईलभिडंग, वाणीउदमी, शेटसावकार, तेलीतंबोली, आंथरुणपांधरुण, चारपोर, पडगेपाळें, बाळीबगडी, खांचखळगे, पैसाअडका, देवधर्म, जोखमाप, अडाणीकवाडी, पुस्तकपानरट, भोगभोगवटा, आणभाष, कर्जवाम, भाजीपाला, देवूळराजळ, दिवानदरवार, कामकारभार, जीवजंतु, बागबगिचा, शेतवाडी, शेतमळा, ख्यालीकुशाली, पाऊसपाणी, फंद फितूर, नारळकांकडे, &c. &c. they being, in the highest degree, valuable words, we have inserted all we could collect.

31. The insertion, in the Dictionary, of so many obscene and filthy words demands apology. First, then, they are not obscene or filthy in the view and feeling of the Murat,ha people: they are ever in the mouths of the softest and most refined speakers. Some few indeed there are, which are, even by the Murat,ha's themselves, viewed as filthy. For the insertion of these we must plead the exceeding currency of them amongst the vulgar mass; and the necessity, thence arising, of explaining them and proscribing them to the Murat,hee student. Accordingly, such words we have marked as, Filthy, dirty, &c. Apology seems demanded likewise for the style, in which we have rendered them. This may sometimes appear too plain and coarse, and, sometimes, too pompous, affected, or involved. The plainness we employed, that, mistake respecting the quality or rank of the word, and misuse of it by consequence, might not be possible: and the pompousness or involution we resorted to where the manifest foulness of the meaning advantageously admitted of being darkened or softened. Still are there many filthy words, especially with the initial letters च and फ, which we have rejected utterly.

32. The detail of the meaning of words is given, sometimes, under the noun, sometimes, under the verb. Let the enquirer, accordingly, on the perception of defectiveness or obscurity in the rendering of that form of the word, which he may be consulting, turn from that form to the other. Some intimation will usually be given to him at the spot. For this compendious mode of treating the subject arguments are obvious.

33. Words such as प्रार्थनीय, प्रार्थ्य, कथनीय, कथ्य, भक्षणीय, भक्ष्य, रक्षणीय, रक्ष्य, &c., as they compose a very numerous class, and are in constant occurrence, have, for the most part, been inserted: because that degree of acquaintance with Sanskrit grammar, which would enable the Murat,hee student to form them when requiring them, or to understand them when hearing them, is too great to be reasonably expected from him. They have, usually, been rendered, "To be asked, to be narrated &c." and, to this indefinite rendering, the learner must supply, as the connection shall suggest, the words fit or suitable, designed or intended, possible or practicable, about or on the point, demanding, requiring, or claiming, subject, liable, or obnoxious.

34. It was found extremely difficult to frame the standard of admission or rejection of Sanskrit words : for, as all Sanskrit words—all without exception, are viewed by Prakrit writers as lying free for their use, and as the profoundest and most recondite are frequently preferred by them, the reader of their works would, with a Murat,hee Dictionary, however voluminous and ponderous, still be exposed to the meeting with words uninserted. The standard at length framed was, that of usefulness to translators from English into Murat,hee.

35. There are some transitive verbs, which, contrarily to the common rule, agree in the past tenses, not with the object, but with the subject; and, by which, accordingly, the subject is not inflected: ex. gr. पढणे, शिकणे, पिणे, जेवणे, समजणे, उमजणे, बोलणे, विसरणे, &c.

36. Formations such as अंधळापंगळा, लंगडालुला, शेजारीपाजारी, भिकारीटाकारी, अडोशीपडोशी, वर्द वाडा, सगासोयरा, झाडझुडूप, कुणबीमाळी, शेटसावकार, &c. arising, either through reduplication, or through juxtaposition of two words of the same general sense, and of such similitude of sound as to constitute alliteration, are extremely abundant. In the singular, they import, Some one or other (of the general character or quality signified by the words of the formation;) some individual of the multitude designated; some indifferent or unparticularized one. In the plural, they import, All, comprehensively or collectively; all, of all the species and varieties, grades and shades constituting the genus or order. Such formations accordingly are styled in the Dictionary, Comprehensive, general, careless, free, &c.

37. Should the interpretation or rendering be thought too diffuse or too detailed, let it be considered that the main feature of a good dictionary is, not terseness and elegance, but clearness and fulness.

38. The verbs, (or the roots,) which appear, occasionally, at the end of any particular meaning of a noun, are the verbs, with which that noun, in that meaning, usually appears in construction: ex. gr. After the meaning of अभिमान are व भोग, मान, बाळग, धर. Such constructions are not obvious; yet, without knowledge of them, the learner would often speak unintelligibly even to the intelligent.

39. The learner, in consulting this dictionary, must ever bear in mind, that words, which, by some, are confined, and perhaps, properly, to two or three senses, will be used, by others, with the most licentious latitude. By some, therefore, many of the meanings found will be contested and denied; whilst, from others, senses or applications may be heard which the Dictionary has omitted. The discrimination, during the compilation of this work, between meanings of partial, and meanings of general, currency,—between applications fanciful and arbitrary, and applications regular and warranted; and finally the deliberation to what extent licentious phraseologies could, from a dictionary of a living speech, abounding in idioms and phrases; with propriety, be rejected;

—has been a pregnant source of perplexity, vexation, and impediment. Be candid, O Public! considerate, and compassionate.

We proceed to the second division of our matter to be communicated.

ORTHOGRAPHY. 1 This, as in all tongues merely colloquial, differs greatly in different quarters of the country. The general intimation we begin with is, that, initially, अ has been preferred to आ, ए to ऐ, ओ to वो. We do not however design to brand, as incorrect, the words beginning with आ, ए, and वो.

2. In the orthography of Murat,hee (as distinguished from Sunskrit) words, as few compound letters have been admitted as possible: thus, for च, छ, झ, ञ, &c. तर, सत, सक, कर, &c. have been preferred. The reasons of this measure will readily appear. It is here mentioned that the learner may be guided in his turning the pages of the Dictionary; and be preserved from giving up, as omitted, words which stand at large in their places.

3. Of the words of a language altogether oral, or, appearing as written, only in epistles, a few poetical pieces, and about a dozen insignificant histories, various even to licentiousness must be the orthography. To a good compilation of the words of such a language it is manifestly essential, either that all the words in all their forms should be comprised in it, or that one form should be imperitatively established amongst the speakers and writers, and that, in that form only, the words should be inserted. Of these alternatives the first is impracticable, or, if practicable, replete with inconvenience and evil: the second, though superlatively desirable, seems feasible only as that exclusive form is most judiciously settled, and as the adoption of it, for the Dictionary, is indirect and under certain preparations. For,—if one sole form of spelling be determined upon, it is obvious that, even under the presumption that, hereafter, that sole form becomes the popular and classical form, exceeding and continual disappointment must, in the interim, be sustained by every one turning the pages of the Dictionary for words heard and seen, again and again, in his conferences and in his studies. Again, if the object of a good compilation of words be two-fold,—be, as well to proscribe the bad form of writing, as to establish or recommend the good, then, indisputably, some (ex. gr. those most frequently recurring,) of the exceptionable forms must obtain admittance. Under this reasoning, the plan we have adopted is this. We have inserted, excepting those, of which the production is manifestly to be ascribed to vulgar ignorance, to drowsy carelessness, or to the affectation of pedants or prigs, all the forms of spelling, common and uncommon, general and provincial. As repetition of the meaning would have swelled the book enormously, we have, under the less common, or the otherwise less approved forms, referred the learner to the form the most common or the most approved: yet, again, as continual reference of the enquirer from one part of the volume to another would have added unnecessarily to the vexations of study, we have, where the repdering was brief, and comprehensible within a line or two, repeated it,—referring still to the more accurate form for the guidance of the learner in his own parlance. And for the more effectual accomplishment of this guidance, the terms Properly, Preferable, Better, Commonly, Usually &c. have been adopted and lavishly employed. THUS, may it be hoped that, all the ends, viz. the gratifying of the searcher of these pages, by rewarding, in every case, whether with the information sought or with direction respecting it, his labour of search; the preserving of the Dictionary from unmanageable voluminousness; and the indicating of the fittest form of spelling, and thus, the contributing towards the general adoption of it;—have obtained their accomplishment.

4. Sometimes, to the marginal word is annexed another form of that word, preceded by “Or,” and then, if it be brief, is added the meaning. This is to indicate, that the form referred to is somewhat, though but slightly and not unquestionably, the preferable form, and that, to it accordingly, the enquirer must turn if he be curious to learn the derivation. The meaning is repeated that, if he care not for the derivation, his labour of reference may be spared.

We proceed to explain the MARKS. 1. The mark (S) signifies that the word, against which it stands, is a Sanskrit word, but of well-established use amongst the educated speakers of Murāṭ, hee. The mark S intimates that the word is still Sanskrit, and is used, in Murāṭ, hee, only by the learned: answering, therefore, to our Dictum, datum, addenda, album, adversaria, &c. which are still Latin. Sometimes this mark, viz. S, will occur in the body of the interpretation of a word, and before some particular signification. Here it denotes simply, that that signification is a high one, and belonging rather to the Sanskrit language than to the Murāṭ, hee. N. B. Many, very many Sanskrit words are coined every day by men acquainted with the rules of derivation and composition; and such are as justly called Sanskrit as the numerous coinages of European nations upon the Latin material are called Latin. Some such formations we have made; and the marks therefore (S) and S must be understood as indicating rather their level and the sphere of their intelligibility than their actual existence in the Sanskrit language. Again: the words, against which the mark (S) stands, may, though truly Sanskrit words, bear, in Sanskrit, no such meanings as those given by us; and those meanings which, in Sanskrit, they do bear, may be altogether omitted. This mark, therefore, is to be understood as simply declaring the origin or native place of the word. On this subject we would add, that it was often exceedingly difficult to determine, of these two marks, viz. S and (S), which was the proper one: ex. gr. of स्त्रिय and स्त्री, two derivatives respectively from स्त्रि and स्त्री, words equally current, the first is as current as its parent, the second, altogether confined to the learned.

2. The mark C denotes that the word is especially used, at least in its primitive or main senses, in the Concan.

3. The mark R expresses that the city and province of Rajapoor and the country southwards are the seat particularly of the currency of the word or the familiarity of the meaning so designated. The mark W expresses the same with respect to the Waree district.

4. The mark P stands for Provincial. When it occurs after a word in the Persian character it stands for Persian. A, in like manner, for Arabic; T, for Turkish, and H, for Hindoostanee. Here also (See Para. I) the marks have reference simply to the languages, to which the words belong; and are by no means to be viewed as intimating, that to those languages belong the significations given. This point must be borne constantly in mind by the Arabic and Persian scholar; or, of every fifth word introduced from those sources, he will be shocked or sickened by the extravagancy of the misapplications made in Murat,hee. Further, the marks P and A denote, not exactly that the words marked are, as they stand, Persian or Arabic, but that they are of Persian or Arabic original, proceeding into Murat,hee through the Hindoostanee:—and, accordingly, the Persian or Arabic words exhibited as the origin of them will, invariably, be in that form (whatever be the name, place, or power of this form in the parent language,) in which they stand in the Hindoostanee: also; that mode of spelling which the Persian or Arabic word may have assumed in Hindoostanee will, usually, be the mode exhibited as the immediate source of the Murat,hee word. The following examples will both make this point clear, and shew the reasonableness of it. Ex. Of खड़ा, though a masculine noun, the origin is, not خدا masc., but خدا fem.: for whilst خدا is known, in Hindoostanee, to man and boy, خدا is unknown altogether. Of कनात the origin is, not كنا A, but قنا the Hindoostanee mode of spelling the Arabic word. Of लका the origin is لك A through the Hindoostanee form لقا.

5. The dash — after a sense points out the application of that sense; or shews the subject of the verb. The brackets () include a supplementary or elucidatory portion of the sense; or indicate the object of the verb.

We have employed the following

ABBREVIATIONS. 1. Corr. for corrupted, corresp. for corresponding, compos. for composition, contrad. for contradistinguished, compreh. for comprehensive, disting. for distinguished, esp. for especially, ex. for example, fr. for from, imit. for imitative, ind. for indeclinable, opp. for opposed, partic. for particular, pl. for plural, Pr. for proverb, reduplic. for reduplication, uncom. for uncommon. Besides the customary abbreviations of adv, a, part, smfn &c. we have v tr for verb transitive, v intr for verb intransitive, v c for verb common, i. e. verb both active and passive, v a n for verb active and neuter. Of verbs common, and of verbs both active and neuter, the rendering given is that only of the active voice. As innumerable Murat,hee verbs have ten, twenty, and thirty senses or shades of sense, it would obviously have increased voluminousness to an inconvenient degree to have repeated them under the passive or the neuter form. And, though the use of a verb will, in some variations of a sense given, be preferably or more frequently neuter, still is the evil involved under an active rendering rather apparent than actual, and far more tolerable than the enlargement of volume by which it would be remedied. It has been judged preferable to leave the learner to make mentally, and as occasion arises, the accommodation of aspect and application demanded by the grammatical designation. And, further, as this language is far from being bound by law and rule, the learner must be prepared to hear many verbs used passively (especially in the past tenses,) which, in the Dictionary, are marked v tr.

We are arrived at DERIVATION. I. Under this head, we may observe, 1st. That the derivation is shewn wherever it could be traced: but, in order to restrain a book already huge from swelling to unmanageable dimensions, such etymons as are discoverable upon slight and easy investigation, as well as the component parts of words compounded after the simplest form of composition, are left to be supplied by the attention of that class of learners, who have both ability and leisure adequate:—for, to that class alone, the purposes of all others being sufficiently served with the meaning, will the exhibition of the stock or source of a derivative, or the resolution into its members of a compound, be, in any one case, serviceable or acceptable. 2dly. That, as, in accordance with the compendious plan of this dictionary, all the meanings belonging to one word (i.e. to one certain composition of letters) are set down under that word, from howsoever many sources it may have been drawn, or of howsoever various parts it may be composed, the derivation given, whether at the head of the interpretation, or of any particular sense forming part of it, is not to be understood as the derivation of the word throughout the senses at the head of which it stands. Commonly, it will shew the source or stock of the word only in the first sense following it, and in all the variations (through metaphor, idiom, usus, abusus &c.) of that sense: and, though it may continue to shew the origin of the word through senses altogether unallied, even until met by another derivation, yet, it is never to be assumed as doing so. And, of the adoption of this arrangement the reason is, simply that, of the two other arrangements conceivable, viz. the placing of the new derivation immediately at the head of the sense, at which it arises; or, the furnishing, in the lieu of it, several learned and ingenious conjectures, or some meek acknowledgments of darkness and dulness, after the fashion of JOHNSON, &c.—the first was often, from pure ignorance, impracticable; and the second, as well on the ground of the light estimation, which etymology, whether just or fanciful, enjoys in the minds of the generality of learners, as on that of the obvious impropriety of swelling a mass, unnecessary or inexpedient. And, in further explanation of our slight solicitude in the investigation of etymons, it may be observed, That the knowledge of the etymon of a word compared with the knowledge of the meaning of it is, in point of utility to the learner, as one to one thousand; for, of the etymon, if the meaning be stated fully and clearly, he may safely and conveniently remain in his ignorance:—that the investigation of the etymon would have, in many cases, consumed more time than the settlement of the meaning:—and that, as of many words the etymons assigned would, necessarily, be too remote and too obscure to obtain admission unless aided by explanation and particular application, the practical enquirer might be prompted, rather than to stand agape at the learning and inventiveness of the Etymologists, to conceive some displeasure at the ponderousness of their tome.

2. Of some words the derivation is given from the Hindoostanee, though possibly, both the Murat,hee and the Hindoostanee words came direct from the common source the Sunskrit; and the Hindoostanee was not the medium of descent. Of such, therefore, the derivation assigned may be understood as simply intimating that the words are current in both these languages. For, of घोडा, बैल, घर, पाणो, पान, and numerous others current equally in Murat,hee and Hindoostanee, how shall be determined, not indeed the priority of their formation from the Sunskrit, but the fact of their formation first in one of these tongues and transmission thence into the other?

We conclude with some

MISCELLANEOUS PARTICULARS. 1. A few Errata have been noticed at the end of the volume: and, for the major part of them, we are indebted to the learning and zeal of one Gentleman. There are, we are aware, unnoticed errors of the Press: but for these we must beg the indulgent allowance of the public towards the largest and most complex book, (typographically considered) ever committed to the Press in Bombay. Where Long Primer, Roman and Italic, Great Primer, Pica, and Persian types, are to be employed in every column, and almost under every word, Printers know, and others may believe, that the reference from fount to fount is extremely harassing, and thus conducive to numerous mistakes. Further, the kana's and matra's of the Murat,hee types were constantly breaking or slipping aside during the working of the Press:—thus occasioning numberless, and, on different sheets, different, errors; to the prevention or correction of all which, no watchfulness and no laboriousness could be adequate. The founts too were defective; and types were made by filing and joining. Of the Persian types we may say in few words, that they were the most execrable ever employed: and, that broken, effaced, defective, and mixed as they were, we viewed, as a matter of rejoicing, the obtaining of the use of them. Of the Printer of this work we simply say, that from the man, whom, for a time, we employed in this capacity, we received no assistance, and that, to ourselves belongs undividedly this name and office. We filled our own house with Compositor's cases and Presses, and we dwelt in the midst of Compositors and Pressmen.

2. For the Appendix of Addenda spoken of in the Memorandum, which was issued with the first delivery of the sheets of the Dictionary, the public will doubtless wait contentedly; as no one individual of this venerated body has put himself to the trouble of furnishing a word. An Appendix, though not promised, may yet be prepared; for, of our own collections the words insufficiently determined, and thus, for the present, omitted, amount to some thousands.

3 We would here acknowledge the assistance we have received in the work. To WILSON'S Sanskrit Dictionary we stand very deeply indebted. We have taken from that invaluable work many words fully, correctly, and neatly explained. We did not indeed derive from it all the aid, upon which we had calculated; for, at least, of ten thousand Sanskrit words the popular apprehension and usus departs widely from the import and power, which they bear in Sanskrit:—and, not a single word, with whatever propriety we might have done it, have we admitted upon the authority of that work. From a compilation, made and kindly lent by MR. L. REID of the Civil Service, we obtained several Konkunee words; uncommon indeed, but which we were enabled sufficiently to ascertain to qualify them for admission. The compilation of DR. CAREY we carefully examined; and many unknown words we extracted for ascertainment: but these lie yet by us unascertained and unacknowledged. Yet, to the amount perhaps of two dozen, we did obtain words from this the first of Murat,hee compilations. In like manner we examined, and extracted the unknown words of, the Dictionary of COLONEL KENNEDY: and these, in like manner, lie by unacknowledged. When the Dictionary had nearly passed through the Press, we were put in possession, by Government, of the manuscript collections of the late Major Hutchinson. These amount to or exceed thirty thousand words. Should any of them be new and ascertainable, they shall appear, if hereafter we compile one, in a Supplement. In our Dictionary, as now before the Public, there stands not one. For the Botanical terms we are indebted to WILSON'S Sanskrit Dictionary, to MAJOR SYKES, to the Revd. MR. STEVENSON, and to our own patient drudgery in enquiring, examining, comparing and considering.

4. We may, in conclusion, offer a few observations upon the nature of our work, and upon the plan upon which such a work must be pursued. To the Murat,hee language is strictly applicable what DR. JOHNSON observes respecting the English:—"that it is copious without order and energetic without rules: that, wherever the view is turned there is perplexity to be disentangled, and confusion to be regulated; that choice is to be made out of boundless variety without an established principle of selection; adulterations are to be detected without a settled test of purity; and modes of expression are to be rejected or received without the suffrages of any writers of classical reputation or acknowledged authority." Our work, then, was to reduce to order a boundless chaos;—to collect words from every book, from every writing, and from every tongue;—to admit or reject without fixed or generally satisfactory grounds for determination;—to ascertain significations from the very mouths of the people;—and to seize phrases and forms of speech from passengers upon the road, or from boys playing or squabbling in the street. The simple or radical words exceed twenty thousand. Of each one, with the single exception of the names of objects, the figurative significations and the idiomatic and popular acceptations and uses may be fairly averaged at a dozen:—yet of these, as they diverge so widely from the literal import; as they afford such instruction on the genius of the Murat,hee; and, as they exhibit so clearly the variance of the idioms of the Murat,hee and English; all that could be collected were to be inserted. The orthography, as in all tongues merely oral, varies in every province and with every penster. All the modes of spelling, therefore, could not be retained: the mode, the most conformable with etymology, or that, the most extensively used, was to be sought and preferred; but, of this mode, that it might command approbation, and, at length, exclusive adoption, the investigation was to be conducted with tedious deliberation. Of some words certain significations are recondite or restrictedly current; and, as such, are exposed to be denied or disputed: for such, therefore, authority was to be sought; books were to be ransacked; and our collections of idioms, saws, and sayings, narrowly inspected. To the extent, perhaps, of three thousand, Arabic, Persian, and Hindoostanee words have entered into Murat,hee; and, under various forms of spelling. The words were to be retained, because the people use them,—the people of all classes and of all parts of the country: but, of the forms of spelling, we could retain only the right form. Now, of ascertaining this right form the burden lay on ourselves undividedly.

To the above observations we add a brief notice respecting the manner, in which we compiled our two dictionaries (viz. the Murat,hee and English dictionary, and the Murat,hee dictionary in the Murat,hee language.) We employed Brahmuns, in several quarters of the Murat,ha territory to collect words, phrases, and proverbs. We collected, after all rejections under the heads of repetition, corruption, unsuitableness (from being too learned, too low, of too obvious signification, of too recent or too confined adoption &c. &c.) above 25,000 words. With a paper of these words in his hand, one of us sat daily among eight, seven, or six Brahmuns. Of every word, in its order, they investigated the grammatical designation, the derivation, the orthography, the gender, the meanings, primitive and figurative, the applications, regular and popular, the currency, whether general or local:—of senses complex and idiomatical they formed familiar examples in illustration:—to significations liable, either from restriction of currency or remoteness of subject, to be denied or contested, they attached a mark denoting the necessity of seeking authority in books or from proverbs, or of agitating them further and with other Brahmuns:—of those nouns, of which the construction in speech is with some certain and not readily discoverable verbs, they sought out the verbs:—and words, of which it was apparent, that the significations or popular acceptations are numerous, or use in idiomatical sentences and phrases, great; or by means of which other words might be excogitated, or on which expressive and valuable compounds might be formed; they detained under view and discussion till they might be held to have furnished all the points connected with them. The points settled were written down instantly both in Murat,hee and English; and, on the settlement of the words under one letter, all the materials,—the paper of words, the sheets of explanations and additions, the Murat,hee mass and the English mass, were removed, and reserved for another hand. This was one department of our work. In another,—a private and quiet room another of us, together with a Brahmun, sat to cull out of books, and letters, and petitions, and dictionaries, every useful word, every new meaning, every fresh idiom, every remarkable application, every requisite authority. This was another department of our work. In the most retired part of the house sat the third of the three, with the most learned Brahmun:—to weigh, condense, arrange, and write off the materials prepared and delivered by the assembly. This was the third, the most important, and the most laborious department of our work. Meanwhile, the assembly with its Head took a fresh letter and fresh writing-books, and proceeded. The second Gentleman with his Brahmun came, at seasons, to lay before them, his words, and phrases, and passages. Hither, likewise, repaired the third Gentleman, with his Brahmun, to solve the doubts and difficulties, and to discuss the new words and senses, which had arisen to them:—thus bringing again under discussion the major portion of the materials. Now, errors were detected; neater definitions or explanations were suggested; fresh words, fresh idioms, fresh meanings were elicited; more striking illustrations were conceived; less contestible authorities were discovered;—till at length, assurance was established of accuracy and fulness. Miscellaneous collections of words and idioms all came, in due course, under the assembly, under the Head Pundit, and under the Gentleman digesting the whole. Thus were our two Dictionaries simultaneously compiled: and thus were 25,000 words augmented to 40,000. We should here add, that the Murat,hee and English Dictionary, having been preserved from the Press, by delay in the arrival of the types &c., much beyond the period, at which we delivered our Murat,hee Dictionary to the public, has enjoyed the advantage of further revision and correction, and has been enlarged, beyond that, by some thousand words.

It is not affirmed that this Dictionary contains ALL the words in use among the Murat,ha people. It is not affirmed that all the words inserted are explained fully and with perfect accuracy. On the contrary, all that allowance and consideration, which is ordinarily yielded to the imperfections of the laborious and the well-meaning, is besought for ourselves and for the defectiveness or erroneousness of our work. It is the product of unremitted labour through six years. It was undertaken, not from a thirst after honor or emolument, but from a humble desire of promoting the propagation of the glorious Gospel; and it was continued, by the energy of this desire, through sickness and weakness, and against troubles, and difficulties, and grievous discouragements. The LORD has brought it to completion: to the LORD be thanksgiving and praise,

MEMORANDUM.

We have stated in the Preface that there are words current amongst the Maratha people, which we have not been able to collect, or, with accuracy sufficient to warrant the insertion of them, to ascertain. It would obviously be advantageous to supply these omissions. Accordingly, a Supplement to the Dictionary, though we enter into no engagement to compile one, we shall retain in view as a work desirable and probable; and, in order to it, shall reposit all new words that may fall in our way. Here then is a field of action for the man of zeal! Let every such man note down the words for which he unsuccessfully consults the Dictionary. Let him note also the errors, of whatever degree or class, which strike his observation. Let him, within a year or eighteen months, forward his collections, the new words explained, and the errors corrected, under cover to the address of the Secretary to the Bombay Native Education Society.* Let Europeans and Natives, let all who derive aid from our Dictionary, join in this work of general utility. The receipt of such contributions must necessarily stimulate our own efforts: and, thus, a Supplementary volume, valuable, both for new matter and for old matter rectified, may be furnished to the public.

Reville not, gentle Reader, neither chafe nor cry, when thou discoverest, in our book, deficiency or erroneousness. But, up! lend the shoulder, add thine own might and skill, and urge strenuously towards Perfection, this work yet so wanting.

MEMORANDUM

We have stated in the Preface that there are words current amongst the people which we have not been able to collect, or, with accuracy sufficient to warrant the insertion of them, to ascertain. It would obviously be an advantage to supply these omissions. Accordingly, a Supplement to the Dictionary, though we enter into no engagement to compile one, we shall retain in view as a work desirable and probable; and, in order to it, shall report all new words that may fall in our way. There then is a field of action for the man of zeal! Let every such man note down the words for which he has no space fully consult the Dictionary. Let him note also the errors of whatever he gives or class, which strike his observation. Let him, within a year or eighteen months, forward his collection, the new words explained, and the errors corrected, under cover to the address of the Secretary to the Bombay Native Education Society, let Europeans and Natives, let all who derive aid from our Dictionary, join in the work of general utility. The receipt of such contributions must necessarily stimulate our own efforts; and, though a Supplementary volume, valuable both for new matter and for old matter rectified, may be furnished to the public.

He will not, gentle Reader, neglect that duty, when thou discoverest in our book, deficiency or error. But, up! lend the shoulder, add thine own might and skill, and urge strenuously towards perfection, this work yet so wanting.

MURATHEE AND ENGLISH.

अ

अ The first letter of the alphabet and an inherent short vowel.

It corresponds with "u" in uncle, sun, fun. It is prefixed ad libitum to adjectives, substantives, and participles introduced from the संस्कृत; and, though with less frequency, and with no elegance, to nouns purely मराठी. It thus corresponds with dis, un, in &c, and signifies

I Privation or Negation; as अपार Boundless. अक्षय Imperishable.

II Deterioration; as अकीर्ति Ill-fame. अकर्म A bad action.

III Diminution; as अबोल or अबोलणा Taciturn. अबुद्धि
Slow, stupid, dull of understanding. अधन Poor.

IV Enhancement; as अमानुष, अपौरुष Superhuman.

Before a vowel it is changed euphoniae gratia into अन; as अनादर Disrespect. It expresses degrees of difference and similarity: but this and all its powers will sufficiently appear in the words which follow.

अं: An interjection expressing contempt, indifference, uncon-cern &c. umph!

अइरण sf ( H) An anvil. 2 A plant; the blunt-leaved variety of Sennaplant.

अई & अईबाप Usually आई & आईबाप qv.

अईन sm A partic. tree.

अईलपईल, अईसपईस &c. &c. For these and similar words beginning with अई see under ऐ; which form of spelling is the general and the better form.

अउटके sn See औटके

अऊट a See औट

अऊत sn (आयुध S) An implement or tool generally (of husbandry, handicraft &c.) 2 As much ground as can be tilled by two bullocks.

अऊतबंदी sf An engagement to pay a fixed sum for the use of a plough and a pair of bullocks.

N. B. For Concanee meanings See under आऊत

mark in general. 3 S The thigh.

अंकजाल sn (S अंक A number & जाल A net.) A table of numbers; an arrangement of figures to facilitate calculations.

क The twelfth letter and first consonant. It corresponds with K. 2 It is assumed as an affix by many Sanskrit nouns in order to their entering into composition. As thus, many exceedingly neat and valuable compounds are formed; and as some, especially those with आत्मा, मूल, पूर्व &c, are of constant occurrence, and might be somewhat perplexing, we insert a number to familiarize the learner with the rule of formation, and to enable him to use it as occasion arises. Ex आत्मा becomes आत्मक and acquires the sense "That constitutes or composes; that forms the soul, spirit, nature, essence, principle of:" as हेजग पंचभूतात्मक आहे This Earth is compounded of the five elements. अलंकार सुवर्णात्मक An ornament consisting of gold. कृत्यात्मक, निंदात्मक, गद्यपद्यात्मक, चिन्तोपात्मक, विगुणात्मक, पुण्यात्मक, पापात्मक, दर्शात्मक, शेकात्मक, लोभात्मक &c. मूल becomes मूलक and acquires the sense "That originates, occasions, produces; that forms the root, spring, source, basis, principle of:" as, पापमूलकदुःख Sin-originated pain; pain, of which sin is the root or source. पुण्यमूलकसुख, सीमलककलह, आकाशमूलकवायु, जलमूलकशब्द &c. पूर्व becomes पूर्वक and acquires the sense "That leads, precedes, heads, introduces &c; that goes before:" as, बुद्धिपूर्वक The understanding or judgment having gone before: i.e. deliberately, designedly, purposely. आदरपूर्वक With respect, respectfully, इच्छापूर्वक With desire or inclination, voluntarily. शपथपूर्वकभाषण Speech with an oath. अगत्यपूर्वक, आस्थापूर्वक &c. जीवन्मृतकपुरुष A man whose father is, or whose parents are, alive. देवमातृकदेश, आनंदविषयकवाक्य &c &c &c. 3 It is a redundant additament; as पुत्रक, दंडक, बालक; for पुत्र, दंड & बाल

This verb, as Dr. Johnson observes of the verb "To take," is used with endless multiplicity of relations. Its uses are so numerous that they cannot all be exemplified; and as it corresponds with the English verb through most of its applications, further explication seems unnecessary. It may be briefly observed here that घेणे is used in the following additional variations of the sense of taking. To take (breath, leave, farewell, revenge, a course or way.) To use, employ. To swallow. To adopt. To endure, bear. To comprise, comprehend. To seize,—as a disease. To take oath.

च The sixth consonant. It has, in Sanskrit words, the sound of Ch in Church; in Prakrit words, the sound sometimes of Chu or Tshu, sometimes of Tsu, which, though difficult to be represented on paper, is easily apprehended by the ear. It was designed to represent this softened sound by 'च'; but, as on this plan, innumerable typographical errors were to be expected, and thus endless and vexatious misdirections to the learner, the following rule is substituted for the discrimination and use of it.

Of words not Sanskrit, (Sanskrit words are all marked with S) not Persian, Arabic, or Hindoostanee, (which words are marked respectively with P, A, and H,) and not of that intermediate class, which, adopted from the Sanskrit, and now of too remote adoption and too general currency to be marked S, are in pronunciation regarded, sometimes with reference to their origin, and sometimes as words of mere Murat, hee, (to such, for the easy discrimination of them, is attached within brackets, the letter S,)—of all words not included under these three classes, let every च, चा, चु, चू, चै, चो, चौ whether initial, medial, or final, be sounded as "tsu" in Buts; and every चि, ची, चे as "tshu" or our Ch, in Chip, Cheek, Chaste.

In exception to this rule, Note.

Ist. that the particle चे as agreeing with a masculine noun in the plural number and nominative case, and चें are, in the Concan, usually pronounced as tse and tseñ.

And II that of some Hindoostanee words, च, चा, चु, चू &c are pronounced as tsu, tsa &c. A few other exceptions may perhaps be discovered.

च ind An affix of emphasis, or of enhancing power; expressing positiveness, peremptoriness, particularity, exactness, certainty" &c. It corresponds with our "very, self, indeed, surely &c." Ex तो चोरच आहे He is verily a thief. तोच चोर आहे He is a thief. तुम्हीच या Come yourself. तुम्ही याच Come at all risks, you must come. मी जेवतांच उठलों I rose instantly after my meal. मी येईनच or मी येईनच येईन I will come, assuredly, positively. It seems further to have a qualifying, modifying significancy. Ex तो पंडित बराच आहे That Pundit is passable, he will serve. Ex पढलेला ग्रंथ बहुत दिवस न पाहिलाअसा पारका पारकाच दिखलागता

ज The eighth consonant. It corresponds, in words from the Sanskrit, with J in Jug, Jump; but in Prakrit words, and in words received from the Hindoostanee, it has the sound, sometimes of J, and sometimes of Dz, as in Adze. It was designed to represent this softened sound by ज; but as, on this plan, innumerable typographical errors were to be expected; and thus endless and vexatious misdirections to the learner, the following rule is substituted for the discrimination and use of it.

Of all words not Sanskrit; (Sanskrit words are marked with S) and not of that intermediate class, which, adopted from the Sanskrit, and now of too remote adoption and too general currency to be marked S, are in pronunciation regarded, sometimes with reference to their origin, and sometimes as words of mere Murāṭhee, (to such, for the easy discrimination of them, is attached within brackets, the letter S)—let every ज, जा, जु, जू, जे, जो, जौ, whether initial, medial, or final, be sounded as dz in Adze; and every जि, जी, जे, as our J in Jilt, Jeer, Jane.

Thus, even the Arabic and Persian words, written with           (as           &c.) of which therefore the sound should be soft, as of z, will be, in Murāṭhee, written with जि, जी, & जे, and sounded with the sound of J.

In exception to this rule, Note. That जे the masc. plural of जो, & जे the neut. singular, and जे the conjunction are, in the Concan, usually pronounced as dze & dzen.

AND that of some Persian and Arabic words, the ज, जा &c are pronounced as ju, ja &c; as in           &c.

ज a S Born, produced, sprung from. It is attached ad libitum to Sanskrit words: ex. gr. अंज, खेज, जरायुज, उदरज, अपयज, जलज, पापज, तपज &c.

ज sm or जवे sn A cant word for dinner. ज being the first letter of जेवणे To eat a meal.
